JSC ON VIEW: MYTHOLOGISTS

17 JANUARY – 19 DECEMBER 2021

Wu Tsang, Wildness, 2012, HD video, 74', color, sound. Video still. Courtesy of the artist and Galerie Isabella Bortolozzi, Berlin.

The third edition of JSC ON VIEW, a series of exhibitions focusing explicitly on the inventory of works in the JULIA STOSCHEK COLLECTION, presents video and sound installations from twelve internationally renowned artists, some of whom are being exhibited at JSC Düsseldorf for the first time.

JSC ON VIEW: MYTHOLOGISTS is curated by Rachel Vera Steinberg, fellow of the JSC Curatorial & Research Residency Program (CRRP) 2019–2020.

Perceptions of truth are widely mediated through moving images. While they can be used by those in authority to exert influence, this exhibition explores the ways in which time-based media can connect political ideologies with the desire to create a world of one's own. Borrowing from various cultural narratives, the works expound on their potential to serve as an incubator for social mythologies.

Traditionally understood as narrations about gods, creation, and sanctity, myths are stories that are widely shared and factually ambiguous. They tell unverified truths, educate and entertain at the same time, and create archetypes from simple characters. JSC ON VIEW: MYTHOLOGISTS addresses the tensions created between facts and fictions through the production of personal as well as collective narratives. The works each grapple with various mythologies by reinterpreting histories, disrupting established behaviors, and imagining new visual and sonic worlds. What binds them together is that the limits between myth, fact, and fantasy are unclear—whether or not by the artist's own making. Through everyday acts of pretending and performing, the works ask: What—if anything—can be trusted? How is meaning assigned to these stories? Who creates these myths and which ones will be carried into the future?

Wu Tsang's video Wildness (2012), along with Mark Leckey's works Fiorucci Made Me Hardcore (1999) and Parade (2003), examines the desire for a sense of belonging within cultural movements and subcultures. These works document particular milieus while examining the collective fantasies that drive their construction. Mike Kelley's decade-long project, Extracurricular Activity Projective Reconstruction #36 (Vice Anglais) (2011), probes and subverts popular American media tropes through nightmarish performances and relationships between cultural archetypes.

Through very different mediums and contexts, the enduring projects by the Guerrilla Girls and the work of Natascha Sadr Haghigian foreground myths specific to the art world through fictionalizing their own personal narratives and participation. In Klara Lidén's videos Paralyzed (2003) and Grounding (2018), the artist uses her own ambiguously gendered white body to challenge and confuse established codes of behavior.

Lina Lapelyté's Hunky Bluff Act 1–6 (2015) and Jamie Crewe's Pastoral Drama (2018) borrow from historic mythologies as well as operatic arias to examine deeply entrenched narratives and gender roles. Similarly, Mika Rottenberg's Chasing Waterfalls. The Rise and Fall of the Amazing Seven Sutherland Sisters (2006) and WangShui's From Its Mouth Came a River of High-End Residential Appliances (2018) use fables, commercial formats, and contemporary architecture as catalysts to open up questions around the production of identity. Laure Prouvost's video work They Parlaient Idéale (2019), created for the French pavilion at the 58th Venice Biennale, established its own set of mythologies through the connection between language, image, and movement. Finally, Jacolby Satterwhite's opulent digital tableaux present utopian science-fiction worlds that forge new relationships and hierarchies.

Rachel Vera Steinberg is the first resident of the new program for emerging curators working in the field of time-based art initiated by the JULIA STOSCHEK FOUNDATION. For this initial iteration, the collection will partner with the Center for Curatorial Studies, Bard College (CCS Bard).

The Curatorial & Research Residency Program (CRRP) was founded with the aim of inviting emerging curators to the JSC Düsseldorf for a two-part research residency. The program consists of a four-week research stay during the summer during the first year and the realization of a project at the JSC in the second year. The goal of the residency is to enable research on time-based art. A curated project will supplement the program, providing hands-on experience at a leading art institution in Germany. During their stay, the resident will be introduced to the Rhineland art scene, produce joint publications, and organize events. The residency (CRRP) is by invitation only. The JSC chooses one promising candidate from around the world and is eager to collaborate with institutions featuring graduate programs in curatorial studies. JSC looks for outstanding candidates specializing in time-based art. Selection is based on the candidates' comprehensive theoretical knowledge and relevant practical experience.

The 2019/20 resident, Rachel Vera Steinberg, stood out for her experimental and challenging group exhibitions and video programming.

Rachel Vera Steinberg is a curator and writer based in New York. In her work, she focuses on cultural distinctions between fact and fiction, time-based media, the role of alternative art spaces, and artistic agency. Her research on science fiction as an exhibition-making modality recently culminated in the group exhibition A faint hum at the Hessel Museum at Bard College's Center for Curatorial Studies, where she completed her master's degree. She has held instrumental positions at two alternative spaces in New York, SOHO20 Artists Inc. and NURTUREart Non-Profit Inc., where she founded exhibition and event programs promoting time-based media and gender equality. She is the co-founder of Custom Program (2017–2019), a micro-gallery in Brooklyn focusing on humor, irreverence, and site-specificity. As an independent curator, she has curated exhibitions locally and internationally and spoken at universities throughout the United States.
